Philadelphia is often called the birthplace of democracy, the first capital of the US, and home to some of the first public schools and the first hospital in the world. But the nation's sixth-most populous city didn't always look so picture-postcard pretty. In the 18th century, the City of Brotherly Love was a very different place: home to a bustling port, slave-trading criminals, and yellow fever that kills thousands of people each year. The late City Sapper Joshua Dixon was commissioned by the city of Philadelphia to draw all the ugly vices of the city: including but not limited to – prostitution, crime, slums, and poverty. Dixon spent six years mapping the area of the city that he described as “an open sewer” and is the source of inspiration for the book, Viral Philadelphia. Viral Philadelphia Travellers who aren't too keen on exploring the crowds of Philly will have a treat on their hands when Viral Philadelphia releases in June. The book is being published by Thomas Dunne Books and includes images from the City Sapper's 18th century maps, as well as from more recent photographs of the same area. Brett and Melissa Cochran, the co-owners of the Amish bakery, Don't Forget Your Paw, used to live in Philadelphia, and were very active in the neighborhood when they lived there. Their story inspired them to start a farm to feed the poor in America, and the farm can be found in the book. The pair have also collaborated on other projects, including writing and directing for Shannak Lattime's film, The White Book. “The White Book” Sh
